Mr. Mason Jones' oratorical abilities are thus culogized by the London journals:—
Possessed of a clear voice and a keen glance, skilled in a gesticulation that is emphatic without being canggrated, Mr. Jones pours forth a continuous speech, which is now a mere sober narrative, now warms into a harangue, without the slighest aid from written notes, and thewever, without the least bited or hesitation. In short, he combines all the care-tild esaberation of a practisedgreader withflitheease and nature of a spontaneous speaker. His tendencies, as may be supwessed, are of the liberal kind; but they do not lead him into Mr. Jones orations would no more be a substitute for a hear, ing than the perusal of a tragedy for the sight of a perfect, pt. It is astoriishing to listen to a young inan relating, not only the history and this naility, and without note or other assistanc conduct and the estimate of character,—London British Standard.

Mr. Jones is an orator, and a taking one, for he fastens upon every trail of character which may, to the ordinary mind, be ambiguous, and makes it clear. He elevates his hero by dwarfing his cotemporaries; he withers humbug, cant and shams oy intensifying the nobleness of honesty, and neither seeptic or Atheist inds bain from his hands. But beside a Rembrandtish light and shade in his contrast of character, he groups his subjects with consummate art, and makes them move before you. Mr. Jones is young artent and educated, with a picroling eye, a well modulated voice, great fluency, and charming popular subjects.—London Sjectator.

voice, great fluency, and charming popular subjects.—London Spectator.

Every one must admit that by incid statement, trenchant criticism and eloquent illustration, he has established a claim to sincere admiration.—London Patriot.

The true orator holds you with his tongue and the yet more potent magnetism of his spirit, so that, for the time, your will is his will. There are very few such men at any period. You may count the great orators of the world, as you may the poets, upon your ten fingers. But they are all the more precious when they do occur, and the world is, or ought to be, very thankful to them. Mr. Jones has a great gift given to jhim. He has enthusiasm, a rhappodial power—excase the phrase—a sewing logether of poetries, a deep sympathy with the beautiful, a manifest love of truth, and a high principle, which will always lead a man who follows it instructively to manify, if not inspired, thoughts. These qualities invest Mr. Mason Jon's with a great interest in our eyes.—London Boll's Weekly Messenger.
